NEW DEPARTURES IN HEADWEAR

Men's hats for fall show to a very marked degree the effect of the war and resulting raw material conditions. Light colors are being featured because they must feature light colors. Pearl, gray, tan and natural shades will be much in evidence. Dark colors will be shown, of course, and sold as before, but instability of these colors in the cheaper lines will influence the dealers to emphasize the light colors, realizing that they will give the wearers user satisfaction in addition to the fact that they are deemed most fashionable. In the matter of shape, the military influence again asserts itself, especially in the soft hats, which are toward lower crowns and broader and flatter brims. Also narrow silk bands will be in vogue again, intensifying the military aspects of these soft hats for fall and winter. Accordingly "trooper" shapes will be very popular. Some of these hats have the narrow bindings stitched on, while others have the raw edge or welt edge brims. The turned under binding is also a feature of some of the models. Besides the shades of pearl and tan, olive drab of the tone worn by our soldiers is popular. Apple green is another good shade. In fact, green in various shades is the dominating note in the soft hats for the season. Even where the felt is of tan, pearl or steel, green often appears as the contrasting trimming effect. Browns are shown to some extent—a great deal more than either black or blue, which for this season are in the background. Another new feature in soft hats is the shadow mixed effects shown chiefly in dark greens, oxfords and steel. Next in popularity to the "trooper" shapes will be the alpines with slightly drooping brims. Fedoras are also shown somewhat. Telescopes are not well defined in the early edicts and it is believed they are not highly regarded for the season. Optimo shapes are for the present suffering a partial eclipse.

Each succeeding season sees a more noticeable retirement of the stiff hat. For this fall and winter derbies are shown in very conservative shape, in fact show but the slightest variations from last season. A trifle wider brim, a somewhat lower crown and a little less rounding of curl. Whatever departures in these stiff hats will be a tendency toward emphasizing lighter colors. Pearls, tans, steels and dark browns are shown more for this fall than has been observed for several seasons past. There are also contrasting schemes in the trimming effects, black bands with the light pearl and in the other shades the bands will be of a lighter tone of the same color as the foundation.

In caps the vogue is toward very Scotch patterns. Jockey shapes are most fashionable, even though these styles have not as yet found the popularity of the more conservative golf shapes.

Sir Henry Edward Duke, the new chief secretary for Ireland, is credited with strong home rule leanings. This despite the fact that he is a member of the Unionist party. In a speech in the house of commons some two or three years ago he urged a home rule settlement. This sentiment he repeated in a recent speech in Exeter. Sir Henry Edward Duke is a barrister and unionist member of parliament for Exeter and succeeded Augustine Birrell, who resigned after the Irish uprising. The new chief secretary has been given a seat in the cabinet. No new lord Lieutenant of Ireland will be appointed to succeed Lord Wimborne, who also resigned after the outbreak of the Dublin rebellion.
